will Not Talk Insurance Until Monday Supt. Kelsey Answers Serugham Abou Charges Against the New York Life and Promises to Make an Investigation.

Samuel Untermyer returned on the steamship Amerika of the Hamburg-American Line yesterday after spending several months in Europe. Mr. Untermyer has been busy on the other side in eampaigning. for the International Policyholders' Asociation ticket for trustees in the Mutual and New York life insurance companies.

Mr. Untermyer returned sooner than he had planned in response to an urgent message telling him that he was wanted badly in connection with insurance mat-This was only a ruse to get him and

Mrs. Untermyer here.
The real reason is that the lawyer's eighteen-year-old son, Ervan, is very ill with typhoid fever. The Lact that the boy is ill was not learned by Mr. and Mrs. Untermyer until the ship docked. They hurried to their country place, Greystone, near Yonkers. The young man has improved rapidly during the last week, but at the time his parents were sent for he was in a critical condition.

Mr. Untermyer has had a lively time of it abroad and has many things to say regarding insurance affairs on the other side. He would not talk yesterday, however, on account of the illness of his son. Mr. Untermyer will probably make a statement on Monday.

Manager George R. Scrugham of the International Policyholders' Association received a reply from State Superintendent of Insurance Otto Kelsey yesterday in regard to the charges that Mr. Scrugham made against the management of the New York Life. Here is what Superintendent Kelsey has to say: eighteen-year-old son, Ervan, is very ill

Your telegram of yesterday was received late last evening in relation to telegraphic complaints made to you from various States the official statement with candidates of the international policy holders' competition's tickscratched off and enclosing other campaign documents on company's stationery with a return stamped envelope.

The New York insurance law requires companies to mail to each policyholder a stateent of the several tickets for directors with full instructions for voting and with blank proxy and return envelope. No other en-closures are allowed. Policyholders may gnore all other papers received and vote on other forms sent by interested parties, pro-yided the names voted are on the official list nominees and the policyholder includes the number of his policy and signs the ballot the presence of a subscribing witness.

If the New York Life complies with the statutory provision for sending out official statements and does not use the funds of the company in promoting the election of the administration ticket nor improperly employ its agents this department cannot prevent those favoring the administration ticket from sending upon their own metion and expense such campaign literature to policyholders as they choose to prepare. Each party to the controversy is entitled to the same and an equal privilege...

The question of wrongfully using money of the policyholders and of securing assistance rom agents under official pressure are matters under investigation.

A second telegram from you dated the 18th calls attention to section 53 of the New York nsurance law. If this section is being riolated and a misdemeaner committed per sons having knowledge of the facts may rosecute the same without reference to the ction of this department.

Your third telegram of October 18, informing me that the New York Insurance Company's agents are personally soliciting sig-natures to official statements and that no tatements have been received by policyholders from the home office, will have im-at midnight and said there were burglars in the house. The sergeant understood that the call came from the house of Clarence Mackay at 174 Madison avenue. He notified the West Thirtieth street station house and Policemen Dwyer, Roloff and Dewey went over on the run.

After a lot of hammering they routed out the caretaker of Mr. Mackay's house. Ne one else was at home, and he said he hadn't 'seard the burglar alarm go off and was positive no one was in the building

While the policemen were making their second thorough search of the house from cellar to garret they heard three revolver shots fired in the street in front. They hurried out and saw a white robed figure in the second story of the house opposite, at 175, and then discovered that the figure was a woman waving a revolver.

When the burglar hunters had been admitted to the house they learned that the woman with the gun was Mrs. T. B. Mocdy, who lives there with Miss F. G. Finch. Mrs. Moody said that she had telephoned to Police Headquarters becluse her burglar alarm was ringing furiously at the time She was tired waiting for some one to come and fired the revolver into the street to attract beip: "

Mrs. Moody said that three times within the past week she has been aroused from sleep by the jangling of her burglar alarm. Twice she found that the scuttle had been tampered with, and she decided that the alarm had been touched off in that way, as it was connected with the entrance from the roof. The narrow cover of the scuttle was securely chained last night, and there was little chance for burglars to force an entrance. The police found no trace of

After the occurrence last night the sergeant in the Tenderloin station remembered that Mrs. Moody had sent for the police twice before, but no trace has ever been found of intruders. Mrs. Moody believes that an unoccupied house next door to her furnished the would-be birglars a way for getting onto her roof.

WARRANT FOR BANK CASHIER. Alleged to Have Accepted Deposits, Knowing Concern Was Insolvent,

BUTTE, Mon., Oct. 20 .- A warrant has een issued for F. E. Garside, cashier of the failed Etna bank, for receiving money for deposit on Friday after he had been informed by wire from Washington that the branch there had been closed and he knew the bank was insolvent.

When he heard of the warrant Garside went to the office of the prosecuting attorney and arranged to give bonds.

Garside and the bank appear to have been eserted by the owners of the Ætna, if ere are any owners. He has been unable to get into communication with them or get any word from them. He does not set any word from them. He does not mow whether they are in New York or in Boston, there having been recently a change of ownership the results of which have not

SOUATTERS' RIGHTS IN TOWN

Carl Carl Wilat Mid

CONTRACTOR MOVED IN ON THE FISH PROPERTY LONG AGO.

Now When the Estate Seeks to Fence Him Out He Asks for an Injunction, Claiming the Land by Adverse Possession -Court Refuses to Grant the Writ.

A fight that has been in progress for a couple of years over the possession of a plot of land on Avenue A between Sixtyfirst and Sixty-second streets has reached the Supreme Court, and as between the squatter, who claims the land by adverse sassion, and the other people, who claim it by inheritance and valid title, the squatter has lost the preliminary tussle.

Thomas A. McLaughlin, a contractor and dealer in stone and other building materials, is the squatter, while Mrs. Emma W. Bleecker, wife of William H. Bleecker, and Miss Laura Fish, both being daughters of McLaughlin says that he has held squatter's rights in the land for over twenty years, and that in that time he has used the plot as a storing place for his building materials. The attempt to oust him from the land has come up in the police and municipal courts, but the litigants were instructed to submit their differences to a court of equity, where a final adjudication can be had. So the fight was transferred to the Supreme Court, where it came before Justice Leventritt on an application by McLaughlin for an injunction to restrain the Fish heirs from interfering with his peaceful occupation and use of the land.

The papers submitted disclose that back in 1839 the land was a part of the old Beekers of the land.

in 1839 the land was a part of the old Beekman farm. In that year the farm was partitioned, and the plot in question went to Catherine B. Fish, one of the Beekman heirs. She conveyed it to her son, Stephen Bayard Fish, in the early '50s, and he also inherited some adjoining property, now all part of the squatter's claim, from his aunt, lane Burrows.

part of the squatter's claim, from his aunt, Jane Burrowe.

Mr. Fish died three years ago and his property went to his two daughters, who claim it now under his will. Failing to oust McLaughlin by a police court preceding, the sisters recently began to build a high fence around the property with the object of making it impossible for McLaughlin to get at the land or the material he had stored on it. McLaughlin resented the fence, and demanded its removal. When he found that the sisters were determined to press their claims, he started a suit in the Supreme Court to enjoin them permanently, and got a preliminary injunction which he asked the Court to continue until the suit should be finally determined.

Justice Leventritt handed down a de-

Justice Leventritt handed down a decision yesterday refusing to continue the injunction. In the opinion the Court declares that the facts submitted are strongly against McLaughlin's claim by adverse possession, and he must abide the list.

As the fence would remain under Justice Leventritt's decision until the suit is ended, which may not be for years, McLaughlin's counsel, James Kearney, said that an appeal would be taken.

A PRINCE ELEPHANT HUNTING N arrow Escape for the Duke of Abruzz

in Uganda. From the London Daily Graphic We have received the following extract from a letter written by F. A. Knowles in Uganda describing an elephant hunt which took place during the visit of his Royal High-ness the Duke of the Abruzzi to Fort Portal The Duke was very anxious to shoot an elephant, so I took him out to look for some on our journey to the Uganda border. The first day he was accompanied by most of his retinue, and I led them up to a herd of elephants. The Duke wounded one beast, a big buil, badly. We followed the tracks of eventually had to give it up. The natives and brought in the tusks, which weighed over ninety pounds each and were of an immense

The second day the Duke insisted on going out with me alone, as he said, very truly, that it was impossible to hunt with so many people. So we started out at day break for a place where we were told we were sure to sighted a herd of about twelve beasts standing in thick cover, with an old bull at some little distance away from the rest. I pointed out to the Duke that it was a risky place to stalk them in, but he insisted on going, so we made for the old bull, which was a very big animal. On our way we passed quite close to the herd, which were on our left. Before we knew how close we were we found ourselves within about ten paces of the big

The Duke had asked me to fire first, but in order to do so I had to get round a bush a bit nearer still. The beast must have heard us, for he became on the alert and I saw his great head beginning to move. There was no time to wait longer and I fired at his left eye. He went over flat, making a tremendous bellowing. The rest of the herd then began screaming and trumpeting, and, as we heard afterward from some of our men standing on the next hill, they crowded round the wounded elephant, helping him along. This little episode escaped our notice on account of the ong grass, which hid the elephants from our

We now heard a tremendous noise, and thought it must be the bull struggling on the ground, but almost immediately after there was more bellowing and a wild rush, and then the bushes and small trees falling down in front of us, and to our horror we found that the whole herd were upon us. There was nothing for it but to run, and I guided the Duke to a small tree which stood a little to one side. We were only just in time, as the huge beasts came charging by us. was an unpleasantly narrow escape, although so soon over, and it was quite a pleasure to find ourselves still alive after it was all over. I escorted the Duke to the borders of my province shortly after this, but we did not come across any more elephants.

TIMES HORSES WITHOUT WATCH. Texan's Knack That Comes From Experience and Practice. From the Fort Worth Record. Fred Holdner, who has been timing horses for the past twenty years, and who is a licensed starter, was one of the officials who occupied the judges' stand at the meet in Forth Worth. During the meet just closed Mr. Holdner has called the time of the various heats a dozen times before he looked at his watch, and when the official time was announced he would not vary from his "guess" more than a quarter of a second. Timing horse racing with the eye is a knack that every one cannot attain. Some time ago at Houston Mr. Holdner was acting as official timer and began to call the quarters, halves, three-quarters and miles offhand, without consulting his watch. He made many converts to his skill, and wagers began to be made that he could tell as close to the correct time of a horse race with his eye as any other two men picked at random could tell with a stop watch. Mr. Holdner saved the money of those who wagered on his skill in this par-Yesterday evening just before Dan Patch started in to pace his mile against time Mr. Holdner remarked that he could call the quarter, half, three-quarters and finish of Dan Patch's attempt to lower the record made on a half mile track. He wrote his figures down on the reporter's note book, and when the official time was announced he had missed the first quarter one-quarter of a second, the second and third quarters he had guessed right, and missed the last quarter one-quarter of a second, making his guess on the mile only one-half second out.

The knack of calling offhand the time of a horse race surely rests in this man from Houston. He says it is a habit, and like anything else experience and practice make his guessing better—and he has been experimenting and practising for something over twenty years at this game.
